66 THINK we must be almost there, Dick, don't you?" said Margaret, peer rag out of the car window at the lights and occasional buildings.

"No," said Dick, without looking up from a tunny paper some man had given him, "you couldn't possibly know, anyway; girls don't know about traveling.

'de was a boy of eight years, spoiled by con-Sant petting, and the girl was two years older. She had been forced to give to this little brother all his life, simply hanse he happened to be a boy. It was very hard sometimes when she knew he was wrong, but she had become used to doing just as Dick wished, and the last thing their father "Margaret, your brother knows the best

Neither of these children had ever seen real southern darkies before, and they found them very different from those in the hotel where they lived in New York. The time of which gave freedom to the slaves, but on many of the plantations where they had been well treated the slaves stayed, they were free, because, you see, they didn't know where to go or what to do, as they had always lived right there. The little Will furnish Sewing Machines or any pickaninnies were always ready with somersaults or other feats to amuse Dick and Margaret.

The great day of the wedding came at last, Repair work done and a postal care and the pretty little procession formed in the vestibule of the Episcopal church where the family attended. The ushers first, two by two, and then the maid of honor, the four Mr. H. Wickham, wife bridesmaids, and finally just ahead of the beautiful bride came Dick, all in white, holding a dear little satin cushion with the gold wedding ring in the middle of it. He walked very slowly, and held his head up very high indeed, so high that when he reached the chancel steps he did not see them, and Richmond, stumbled so that the ring fell off on the soft carpet. No one saw it, not even Dick Men's Suits cleaned and pressed, $1.00 himself, who was very much mortified because he had nearly fallen. When the minister came to the place where he tells the Plumes, etc., cleaned or dyed. ace was very red as he stood holding the little empty cushion, and he was ready to cry. What do you think they did? Why, the groom took a ring that had belonged to 315 N. 5th Si., Richmond, Va. his mother off his little finger, and, turning to the bride, shipped it over her wedding finger. They smiled into each other's faces, though Cousin Agries did have tears in her soft brown eyes.

When the procession went down out of the church Dick carried the little cushion, but he just kept his head down, he was so ashamed. His poor little heart was bursting to think he had done such a dreadful thing but when Cousin Agaes stooped down and klased him just before she went away, and told him not to care, and that she forgave him, he just sobbed on her shoulder.

What a wonderful change the loss of that little ring made in Dick. It seemed to show him as nothing else ever had his faults. He knew that if he had not been so lord! in his bearing and had paid more attention to where he was going instead of trying to show off to the friends of the family gathered at the church he would no have stumbled, and of course would no have lost the ring. It was the very ber thing that could have possibly happened to him, both for his own sake and the walfare and happiness of his long abused sister. While the sister was sorry for the accident, and especially sorry for the brother, yet she appreciated fully the change for the better in him, and after that really got some comfort out of her young life.

Dick was a different boy from that day. He had less confidence in himself, and did not think his way was always the best. He was nicer to Margaret, too, and people got to loving him, not because he was a heautiful little boy and wore nice clothes, but because he was agrocable and kind.

When the bride and groom drove off the day of the wedding Agnes looked at her husband and said, emiling through her tears: "It is a good thing, dear, that we are not superstitions, isn't it?"

"Yon, dearest, our love is preof against such a little thing as the incepting of a ring."—Detruit Free Press.
